

IMAGINATION

Imaginative thinking always takes universality in an abstract and external way. But absolute universality is not to be thought of either as the universality of reflection, which is a kind of consensus or generality, or, as the abstract universality and self-identity, which is fashioned by the understanding (§6,note), and keeps aloof from the individual.

G. W. F. Hegel